

Salpie Djoundourian is an associate professor of economics in the Adnan Kassar School of Business at the Lebanese American University. Mrs Djoundourian holds a PhD in Economics from Louisiana State University, an MSc in Economics and a BS in International Trade and Finance. Her primary area of expertise is applied microeconomics with emphasis in environmental and natural resource economics and public finance. She is actively involved in academic research and scholarly work as well as consultancy work for reputable organizations in both private and public sectors. Her research appeared in International Environmental Agreements: Politics, Law and Economics, Public Choice, Journal of Economic Policy Reform, Environment, Development and Sustainability and Transportation Research, among others.

SALPIE DJOUNDOURIAN

